

The Burn Center of the Caribbean

A Case for Support

When a child is severely burned in Puerto Rico, two emergencies begin at once.

The first is medical. The second is financial. Puerto Rico — an island of 3.2 million people — has no burn center of its own. The most serious cases, many of them children, are flown more than a thousand miles to the mainland, away from their families during the most frightening days of their lives. One Puerto Rican family was billed $1.7 million. A severe burn can take a child's skin; the debt that follows can take a family's future.

A first for the island

We are building Puerto Rico's first comprehensive burn center built around its children — and a financial safety net so that no family is bankrupted for saving their child's life. Every child of a low-income family is treated with full expertise, regardless of what the family can pay.

A model built to actually work here

Burn surgery is among the scarcest specialties in American medicine: roughly 300 surgeons for the entire country, almost none in the Caribbean. So we don't wait for an impossible number of specialists. We multiply the reach of a single expert burn surgeon through a network of specially trained nurse practitioners who bring wound care into communities across the island — expert care, close to home, at a fraction of the cost.

Your required gift can build something that has never existed

As an Act 60 resident, your annual child-poverty contribution is already required. Directed here, it becomes founding capital for the first pediatric burn safety net in Puerto Rico's history — a cause being established as a CECFL-listed, fully compliant charitable arm, in the place you now call home. You won't be one more donor to an established charity. You will be a founder of something that protects children for generations.
